

Hope you're all still keeping safe and well and are still doing OK (considering...)

Team Sloss has regrettably been asked to pass on the following information about Daniel's HUBRIS shows at The Queen's Hall, Edinburgh.

We hoped the shows would be able to go ahead in August, in whatever form was possible/safe, but even though you can get your haircut north of the border now, it's still not permitted to do indoor shows in a way that makes it feasible to go ahead - yet. Things are changing almost day by day and the Scottish Government has been great at keeping people informed and the drop in COVID-19 cases really does look like Scotland is on the right path with opening things up carefully and sensibly...but... the truth is that the logistics of opening larger theatre venues safely are enormously complicated. And no one can or should rush things. But a lot of excellent people are working hard on making it possible.

We have genuine hope and expectation that Daniel's HUBRIS shows can still go ahead - but we can't speed up the process of reopening safely it needs to be a little further down the track to make sure it's all ok for everyone - especially the audience and, of course, the hardworking venue staff.

This is still a difficult time and circumstances are beyond anyone's control. You know that, we know that but it still bears saying. It's pretty fucked actually... but we are reasonably confident that no Slossballs fans manufactured a killer virus in Wuhan so we will keep working on making this work in the best possible way so the shows can happen in a meaningful way (ie. fun, safe, proper atmosphere, indoor comedy gigs) just as soon as it can be done properly.
